

A HAND-BOOK OF ARCHITECTURE FOR THE UNLEARNED.

Small 8vo. neatly bound, 4s. 6d. with Illustrations.

HISTORY IN RUINS:

A SERIES OF

LETTERS TO A LADY.

EMBODYING A POPULAR SKETCH OF THE HISTORY OF ARCHITECTURE, AND THE CHARACTERISTICS OF THE VARIOUS STYLES WHICH HAVE PREVAILED.

BY GEORGE GODWIN, F.R.S. F.S.A.

Hon. Sec. of Art-Union of London, and Honorary Member of various Societies.

"In a very pleasing and picturesque style the outlines of architectural knowledge are presented, chiefly in the historical bearings of the science. Mr. Godwin's work will supply all the instruction necessary for the non-professional reader, and to what it produces to be, 'A Handbook of Architecture for the Unlearned.'—Literary Gazette.

"The object is to illustrate history by the ruins of ancient edifices still in existence, and the subject is singularly curious and interesting. It is treated pleasantly and treated correctly. The book is especially recommended to public notice."—Observer.

"The author conveys, in a most pleasing form, a finished lesson of architectural science, and instructs how the history of the world is elucidated, and illustrated by the history of its buildings."—Globe.

"The facility of clearly communicating what he fully comprehends Mr. Godwin most successfully exemplifies in these 'Letters.' We can earnestly recommend the volume as unique in design and excellent in object and execution."—Morning Advertiser.

"We have seen few books on a similar subject so pleasantly treated and so likely to become a favourite with the public. We believe there is a position that Architecture is a dry study. Read Mr. Godwin's little volume and you will only wish that it had been larger. You will find Architecture is not a dry, but a most pleasing study."—Leader.

"The features of the several styles are delineated sufficiently to give the reader a good idea of their characteristics; matters of taste, ornament, and the results of extensive reading, are judiciously and judiciously introduced; and everything illustrates the text and the volume is so judiciously written, that it is sure to be liked wherever it is known."—British Mercury.

THE NATURAL SYSTEM OF ARCHITECTURE, developed upon the Pythagorean and Mediaeval Systems.

Mr. Griffith's Natural System of Architecture, evolved from particularly to the temples of Greece, beginning with the primary forms in geometry and applying these forms within the circle to both plans and elevations, giving the true and just proportions, whether upon the triangle, the square, or the pentagon, prove that the author has succeeded in developing a true and perfect principle. "Paper read at Royal Institution of British Architects, June 14, 1857."

ANCIENT GOTHIC CHURCHES: their Proportions and Character.

By W. P. GRIFFITH, F.R.I.B.A. F.R.A.

Lately published, Part I. to 10s. and Part II. in

ANCIENT GOTHIC CHURCHES: their Proportions, and Character. Illustrated by numerous Diagrams.

The reader will see that such a system as laid down by our author, as beautiful as it is simple, must have been the process employed by the architects of old—divided into four parts, vol. 1.

"It is obvious that if through these investigations we arrive at the modes by which medieval architects really laid out their ground plans, we shall have made no inconsiderable advance in the study of their designs—a real progress."

"The notion of the Temple Church has many curious features about it; and we have no objection to admit that the form of the equilateral triangle has furnished it, as it probably has also other notions."—The Architectural Gazette, vol. 9.

Published by the Author, 8, St. John's-square, London.
